The speaker then referred to the many un-American and unnecessary questions a man is asked when he goes to register. Why is it they want to know where every man sleeps? Why, it is for spotters to pry into your affairs and see how you are going to your anairs and see now you are going to vote; it is nothing else. It is the law, however, but a badly drawn law. He favored a registry law, but thought this one ought to be wiped out. Then we will pass a law that will prevent fraud.

Relative to the Australian law, he said there was more machinery about it than there is on a gallows. Besides the five judges and booths for every fifty voters, there is a twenty-five foot deadline and if a man gets one toe over this line he is a criminal. The judge tore the foreign Australian law to pieces and clearly illustration. tralian law to pieces and clearly illus-trated how cumbersome it was especially to citizens who were not well up on the English language.
